 attorney. Gregg that his client did preferential treatment during the time spent in prison home detention before it was applied. Sapperstein moved to a new prison in case could be earned. Sapperstein said. as done by the attorney said. "It is impossible to suggest

Co. He leases video poker games to dozens of bars and is a well-known liquor license broker. When people buy liquor licenses from him, he often requires that they also lease his video poker games. Bar owners sometimes use money they earn from the poker games to help cover expenses, including money owed to brokers.

The Baltimore City Board of Liquor License Commissioners, which oversees roughly 1,400 liquor licenses in the city, has cracked down on brokers recently. Some brokers sit on licenses for months at a time to get the best price possible. State law mandates that dormant licenses expire after 180 days or 360 with an extension, but past liquor boards allowed some brokers, including Sapperstein, to hold on to licenses as long as they paid annual renewal fees or initiated the transfer process.

Rohrbaugh's office has subpoenaed thousands of documents from the liquor board as part of an investigation into the state agency's policies and procedures.

Gilbert Sapperstein pleaded guilty to bribery, theft and conspiracy for stealing $3.3 million from the city schools. He was sentenced to 18 months in jail but will only serve 9 months at home.

Mafia kingpin Gilbert Sapperstein escapes justice and theft of business

Judges of the Prince George's County Circuit Court responsible for supporting the Sapperstein crime syndicate, insiders:

Judge Thomas P. Smith, - Judge Allan Shepherd, - Judge Nichols, - Judge Love, - Judge Peter J. Messite, US District Judge; - Judge Paul Mannes, US Bankruptcy Court

In grateful appreciation for turning this average citizen into an advocate for justice and the rights of his fellow citizens. Their accomplishments have been chronicled in the case files of 107 court proceedings in the Maryland and Federal Court system. All of these relate to the first $5 fraud committed by the Sapperstein crime syndicate members against this candidate, his partners and his family. Without their help this candidate would not have a platform to run on.

Proposed development Prince Georges Gateway South viewing from Shipman Parkway heading south on branch Avenue Temple Hills Maryland proposed in 1992. With 12 lanes of traffic underneath envisioned by candidate George McDermott believed in the county at that time.

I hold the GSA responsible and the courts for not honoring. The terms of their solicitation for offer which their agents were doing an inside deal with other developers for sites located outside of the designated area of contract. Political paybacks and corruption. Supported by court corruption and 29 years of litigation abuse.
